

Event photo journal courtesy of Geoff Bartlett Photography.

Gypsy-folk four-piece The Scrims opened the afternoon with an hour of musical magic.

350 Pacific's Jacynta Fuamatu got the crowd around their #HaveYourSei campaign - where placing a flower behind one ear demonstrates your support for the Pacific Climate Warriors' Declaration on Climate Change.

Local singer-songwriter and climate activist Zoë Fox wooed us with her vocals with some of her band's new hits.

Future Super's Michael Bones spoke about why they have partnered with Climates. See how you can turbo-charge support for Climates by switching your super here!

The inspirational President of Melbourne Kiribati Group, Reese Masita shared inspiring insights into I-Kiribati culture and the vulnerability of its communities to climate change.

Samoan dance group Nesian PEARL blew us away with their energy and style, and had the crowd dancing along too.

The University of Melbourne's Dr Sebastian Thomas talked about the urgency of climate change and how the University, together with Climates, is working to improve outcomes.

Then we heard from two of our own volunteers Kate and Adhitya who spoke about their contributions to building resilience to climate change across the Australia-Pacific region and how volunteering with Climates makes their lives more meaningful.

West Coast Eagles star and Fijian-Australian Nic Naitanui engaged in an honest conversation about life as a footy player, and how he'd like to use his profile to raise climate awareness.

Once our silent auction and raffles had been announced DJ Symewave (Jo from Big Scary) dropped some great old and new classics to get the dance floor started. What a day!

Prepared by: Oli Moraes
Contact: oli.moraes@climates.org.au